

General Data Protection Regulation

As you are aware the European Directive regarding the general regulation of data protection (GDPR) came into force on the 25th of May 2018. As such, we would like to contact our interested parties to offer assurance that Deval Limited take the protection of your data with utmost seriousness.

We naturally need to hold business contact details of our current suppliers and customers as this is vital to the continuation of a mutual and efficient relationship. These details shall only ever be used by staff of Deval Ltd in conjunction with their daily roles of employment.

Furthermore, we can assure you that we will never share these details with any outside organisation without your permission, except to those required by current or future legislation.

The company does not actively gather information from visitors to its website “devaltd.co.uk” and any contact made through the website or associated email will only be used in conjunction of the enquiry. While browsing our website cookies may be evident, if you do not want your visit to encounter cookies, we request that you change your computer settings to reject cookies.

Intellectual property made available to the company by its customers and suppliers in the pursuit of meeting the required outcome of contract or enquiry shall be held and used solely for the passage of meeting the requirements of the enquiry or contract.

As all the above is essential to managing a successful company and delivering a quality service and product we shall continue with the above measures, if however, you are concerned by any of the above or you wish for Deval Ltd not to contact your business in the future then please contact the company to discuss your concerns. If you instruct us to do so we will delete your contact details from our system.
